Course Descriptions

BI 205: Forensic Biology

Forensic evidence has become increasingly important to law enforcement investigations and court proceedings. This hands-on course will introduce students to a range of biological topics that intersect with forensic analysis such as identification, time of death determination, hair and fiber analysis, and fluid analysis. Lecture and Lab. Labs may include measurement and microscope use, documentation and evidence collection, vertebrate osteology, hair analysis, forensic entomology, and forensic anthropology. The course is suitable for non-majors; no pre-requisites are required.

BI 358: Human Physiology

This course is designed to provide students with an understanding of the function and regulation of the human body. The course will stress the physiological integration of the organ systems to maintain homeostasis in the human body. Course content will include neural and hormonal homeostatic control mechanisms, as well as study of the musculoskeletal, circulatory, respiratory, digestive, urinary, immune, reproductive, and endocrine organ systems. Prerequisites include BI 256 Human Anatomy AND one semester of college-level chemistry.

CR 300: Special Topics: Ethics in Criminology

An examination of the ethical issues pertaining to the professional activities in the field of criminology. Through focus on policing, courts, corrections, and policy making, all aspects of the field are explored through the various philosophies of ethical decision making. The course takes the students through the development of the awareness of ethical issues, and critically thinking and analyzing the issues in order to increase their sense of personal responsibility. This course fulfills the requirement for PYAPY 352 Professional Ethics for Criminology Majors.

EN 484: Special Topics: Arthurian Literature

This course will examine the literature and legend of King Arthur and his knights, from his possibly historical origins to contemporary retellings of his story. We will read many well-known texts such as Malory's Le Morte DArthur, Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, and A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court. Along the way, we will play with the shifting ideas of chivalry and knighthood, rulership, the roles of men and women in society, and history vs. literary convention, and think about why King Arthur remains such a popular and enduring figure in literature and media of all kinds today.

ENGS 395: Special Topic: International Cinema

This course will examine the cinemas and media industries of several countries across the globe. These include, but are not limited to, France, Spain, Germany, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Russia, Romania, Italy, Japan, China, Iran, Israel, Nigeria, Senegal, Mali, Brazil, Mexico, Cuba, and Argentina. Film screenings will supplement the pertinent issues of national identity, as well as historical and contemporary political issues. This course will also focus on the key filmmakers, genres, and movements.

HI 121: European History from 1215-20th Century

This course is a survey course for students who are interested European History and also for students who want to move on to upper-level non-US history classes offered under the HI395 umbrella. Topics covered will include Renaissance, Reformation and Counter-Reformation, Revolutions, Black Death, the rise of the Nation-State, the Age of Exploration, the rise of print culture, Colonialism, Imperialism (economic, environmental, and political), and the consequences of World Wars, from the Seven Years War to World War II. The course assumes no prior knowledge by the students and would be excellent for students preparing to teach.

HI 380: American Sport History

This topical course examines American sport over the course of the nation's history in relation to political, economic, social, and cultural developments. Specifically, the class will focus on the growth of organized sports and how race, class, gender, ethnicity, capitalism, nationalism, globalization, and religion have crafted a relationship between sports and American society. From this course, students will develop a better understanding of the history of America through an assessment of the influence that sports have had in shaping American culture.

HI 395 1: Churchill's Follies - Britian, France and the Creation of the Modern Middle East

The course will trace British and French imperialism in the Middle East in the 1800s and the carving up of the Ottoman Empire in 1919. Themes such as orientalism, colonialism, the failure of the Wilsonian Moment, and the burgeoning geopolitics of oil will be explored. Students should have 6-9 hours of history or international relations prior to entering the class as there is a strong writing component.

HI 395 2: From Main Street to Wall Street - The History of Capitalism and Labor in America

This topical course covers the history of American capitalism and labor movements from the colonial period through the 21st century. Topics include: the debate regarding the profitability of American slavery; the causes behind American financial boom and bust cycles and the government responses to financial perils, including the Panic of 1819, the Great Depression, and the Great Recession of 2008; government reaction to class warfare and labor violence in cases such as Bacon's Rebellion, the Molly Maguires, Haymarket, Homestead, and the Wobblies; the usage and exploitation of land and resources for capitalistic gain as evidenced by the Dust Bowl of the 1930s; the developments of wealth inequality and the opposition to capitalism from the communist, socialist, populist, and Occupy Wall Street perspectives; and the decline of labor unions since the 1980s and the subsequent "Nickel and Dime" lifestyle of American minimum wage workers in the modern era.

HIPS 354: Sexuality & Nationalism

This idea seminar examines the histories and patterns of sexual relations in different societies as expressions (manifestations) of different national, cultural and ideological identities. How do the common patterns of sexual relations reflect political patterns of particular societies? How are our most intimate self-expressions influenced and shaped by our broadest social and political beliefs? Topics include Sexuality and Gender in Western World, in Communist World, in Muslim World, Sexuality and Underdevelopment, and Sexuality and Globalization. Mainly, it is an overview of some of the main historical and contemporary political identities examined through the conceptual tool of sexual relations.

GS 595: Special Topics: Advanced International Peacebuilding

This course is an applied-theory project that utilizes a teamwork format. That is, students will constitute a team that works on a case study of a real conflict. The team is to study the underlying facts and issues of the conflict and prepare a role-playing scenario for use by USM's 7th Annual High School Students' Peace Conference. The scenario is to assist conference participants in (1) understanding the issues and causes of the conflict, (2) conceptualizing practical approaches to reducing tensions and (3) speculating about possible ways of ameliorating historical traumas. The instructor will participate as a member of the team, providing guidance and oversight.
